Mark MacIntosh and Doney Ward, hailing from somewhere in the mountains, managed to get into the picture show at Salt Lick without paying, and when asked to pay, angrily refused and showed fight. When Mr. Ross Alpey, who was collecting tickets at the door, told them they would have to pay or leave the house, MacIntosh started to draw his revolver, but before he could do so was knocked down by Mr. Alpey. A scuffle ensued, in which Mr. Alpey's son, Clint Alpey, took part, and in which MacIntosh's pistol was discharged, seriously wounding him in the abdomen. He was taken to the Ashland hospital. The annual church and Sunday school convention of the Christian churches of Bath county was held here Tuesday. A large crowd attended and an excellent program was carried out. OIL WELL DRILLED

The Olympia Oil Corporation, of West Virginia, is reported to have drilled in a good well on Richard Crouch's farm two miles south of Owingsville. The fight against the manufacture and sale of cigarettes in Kentucky is shortly to be launched in Louisville. It is believed the organization is preparing to launch an anti-cigarette campaign before the legislature at Frankfort next January as part of a nation-wide cigarette prohibition movement.

The State Board of Health urges that every citizen of Kentucky, on account of the prevalence of the typhoid fever, be vaccinated against the disease. The board points out that of the five million soldiers in the late war not one lost his life by typhoid fever and everyone of them was vaccinated with the same serum the State Board is now using.

"Ouija! What's the good word?"

MY YOUNG sister,

HAS A Ouija board,

AND SHE believes it,

AND TALKS to Noah,

AND I think she talks,

TO HER best fellow,

WHO'S DEAD but doesn't know it,

AND I need to give her,

THE LOUD, rude laugh,

BUT I'M sorry now,

BECAUSE LAST night,

I WAS home alone,

SO I got the board,

AND PUT in a call,

FOR JOHN, thirty years,

AND OTHER departed spirits,

BUT THE line was busy,

FOR NOTHING happened,

THEN I cheated a little,

AND IT spelled this,

"GRAMMASHOTTA SEVEN."

SO I shut off quick,

TO HEAD off any,

FURTHER FAMILY scandal,

THEN I stopped to smoke,

A CIGARETTE,

AND AFTER a while,

I CRANKED up wee-wee,

AND ALL of a sudden,

IT STARTED off,

AND QUICK as a flash,

IT SAID something,

"THEY SATISFY."

The MYSTERY OF THE SILVER DAGGER

BY RANDALL PARRISH

AUTHOR OF "THE STRANGE CASE OF CAVENTISH"

"MISS CONRAD"

Synopsis.—In a New York jewelry store Philip Severn, United States consul agent, notices a small box which attracts him. He purchases it. Later he discovers in a secret compartment a writing giving a clue to a revolutionary movement in this country seeking to overthrow the Chilean government. The writing mentions a rendezvous, and Severn decides to investigate. Finding the place mentioned in the writing, he enters a room where a woman is waiting. She is a woman of the place in the city. A woman in the place is not by a man, seemingly by appointment, and Severn, his suspicions aroused, follows them. They go to the designated meeting place, an abandoned iron foundry. At the rendezvous Severn is accepted as one of the conspirators and admitted. He meets a stranger who addresses him as Harry Davis. The incident plays into Severn's hands and he accepts it. His new acquaintance is a notorious thief, "Tweedledee" George Harris. Concealed, Severn hears the girl he has followed address the conspirators. She urges them to hasten the work of revolution.

"What agent? Oh, you mean Mr. Harris? That about that arrangement, Mr. Harris?"

I recognized Harris in the reply, his voice perfectly calm and confident. In all probability he lied, but it was done most convincingly.

"Those were my positive instructions in London," he said coolly. "The banking house there was not to be involved in the slightest degree; no trace of the transaction was to appear on their books."

"But why has the money not been drawn and used?"

"That is for you to say. I tried to get him to act, but he refused without another authorization from Mendez, and special instructions."

"You never received those from Alva?"

"No, I asked by code; I supposed he would answer by messenger."

There was a pause, a silence. I imagined I could understand something of what Harris was endeavoring to accomplish in this delay, this getting the entire sum transferred into currency in private hands. It was one more step in his intricate scheme of robbery, but so confidently concealed as to arouse no suspicion. What else had he done to this end already? To achieve delay, and this gain opportunity, and he intercepted, or even changed, no code message sent by the Washington?

All this was possible enough, yet it was evident that the woman accepted the explanation as satisfactory.

"I do not know how true all this is," she said at last, slowly. "I was told the money was already being used. I do not believe there is any necessity of any further endorsement, as Senator Alva is working under direct commission from the Junta. However, I will verify this tomorrow. I am going to retire now, seniors, and leave you alone to discuss the matters I have presented. Above all it is necessary that I should know at once who you select for the important work, and when we may expect results. This information I must positively take back with me."

"When do you return?"

"On the midnight train. I have three hours yet."

CHAPTER V.

A Strange Appointment.

I must have failed to grasp the full meaning of what she said, or else it never occurred to me that her retirement would be made through this particular door. At least she had pushed it wide open before I realized the necessity of retreat, and I was hemmed in behind its barrier, fortunately securely hidden from the eyes of those in the larger apartment. Some one—Alva, no doubt, from his words and voice—was beside her as she emerged, and, indeed, I had seen her enter the hall that evening the door back against me. I stood there startled, unable to move, afraid that my very breathing might be overheard.

"You leave at midnight, you say, secretly," he protested in Spanish; "but surely you intend to remain at present?"

"Until you reach some final decision—yes; that is my mission."

"I shall see to it that at once; we will draw lots. You can wait either in this room, or another just beyond. Promise you will not go until I see and talk with you again."

"I promise that—so you are not too long. I must make that trip."

"You shall make it. My car is only two blocks away, and I pledge myself to have you there on time. All this business can be attended to in half an hour."

She stepped back, partially closing the door, while she turned, her own eyes on the latch, facing me. Her face whitened under the light, her teeth clenching close against the red line as though to repress a scream. She was startled almost beyond control, yet mastered the fright instantly, she glanced about at the partially open door, and stealthily closed it tightly.

"What—what are you doing here?" she gasped in English, her voice trembling. "Listening?"

GOLD FLOWS INTO COUNTRY

Almost Every Nation in the World is Shipping Precious Metal to United States.

New York.—A veritable flood of gold is sweeping upon the shores of the United States.

Already the precious metal in the country has attained the unprecedented amount of $8,001,487,915, and yet

"No," I had, seeing that some possible means of escape, and hoping thus to prevent her sounding an immediate alarm. "I was waiting for a friend who is inside. I must come into this room."

"You actually believe that?"

"You are one of these men?"

"Not exactly," I had no idea. "I know one of them very well and he stationed me out here."

She appeared puzzled, doubtful, yet she mysteriously still held the door tightly closed, her eyes searching my face as if to see the man you know, your particular friend, your ally.

I hesitated an instant, the name escaping me.

"Harris," I said, and managed to smile, as though I knew of his address. "You see I have not always known him by that name. There are occasions when names need to be changed occasionally."

"True," she admitted soberly. "Do you mind identifying the curiosity of a smile, in what his real name might be?"

"I could not, if I so desired. I have since I know him he has been called Harris. That is all I can say."

"Harris?" Then he is not Chilean, and never before pretended to be. I thought that from the first. Is the man English or Irish?"

I shook my head.

"You won't answer. That may be ignorance or it may be pretense. Never mind. I recognize your face now. You were the man cutting in the saloon an hour or so ago. Were you waiting for this Harris—Alva Harris—then?"

"We met here."

Her lips smiled a little, and her eyes.

"Did I merely dream that you appeared somewhat interested in me at the time, or was it true?"

"It was true," I answered honestly. "You did interest me. You didn't appear the sort to be making a man."

"No, I asked by code; I supposed he would answer by messenger."

There was a pause, a silence. I imagined I could understand something of what Harris was endeavoring to accomplish in this delay, this getting the entire sum transferred into currency in private hands. burden my heart, and forget all except the day I loved my country, and thus we were at peace.

"Frankly, I do not know what to think," I answered at last. "Your tale, when I heard it, I understood it, somehow does not fit in with my natural conception of you as a woman."

She laughed, but so low as to be inaudible to those beyond the closed door.

"You amuse me. I found a woman—even a womanly woman. If you please, have her country and be willing to sacrifice in its behalf?"

"Not to the extent of friendship and devotion to the end that I should be willing to sacrifice in its behalf?"

"And is that my purpose here, you think?"

"It is not. This is a neutral land, and what else can this conspiracy comprehend but cowardly destruction?"

It was one more step in his intricate scheme of robbery, but so confidently concealed as to arouse no suspicion. What else had he done to this end already? To achieve delay, and this gain opportunity, and he intercepted, or even changed, no code message sent by the Washington?

All this was possible enough, yet it was evident that the woman accepted the explanation as satisfactory.

"I do not know how true all this is," she said at last, slowly. "I was told the money was already being used. I do not believe there is any necessity of any further endorsement, as Senator Alva is working under direct commission from the Junta. However, I will verify this tomorrow. I am going to retire now, seniors, and leave you alone to discuss the matters I have presented. Above all it is necessary that I should know at once who you select for the important work, and when we may expect results. This information I must positively take back with me."

"When do you return?"

"On the midnight train. I have three hours yet."

A Strange Appointment.

I must have failed to grasp the full meaning of what she said, or else it never occurred to me that her retirement would be made through this particular door. At least she had pushed it wide open before I realized the necessity of retreat, and I was hemmed in behind its barrier, fortunately securely hidden from the eyes of those in the larger apartment. Some one—Alva, no doubt, from his words and voice—was beside her as she emerged, and, indeed, I had seen her enter the hall that evening the door back against me. I stood there startled, unable to move, afraid that my very breathing might be overheard.

"You leave at midnight, you say, secretly," he protested in Spanish; "but surely you intend to remain at present?"

"Until you reach some final decision—yes; that is my mission."

"I shall see to it that at once; we will draw lots. You can wait either in this room, or another just beyond. Promise you will not go until I see and talk with you again."

"I promise that—so you are not too long. I must make that trip."

"You shall make it. My car is only two blocks away, and I pledge myself to have you there on time. All this business can be attended to in half an hour."

She stepped back, partially closing the door, while she turned, her own eyes on the latch, facing me. Her face whitened under the light, her teeth clenching close against the red line as though to repress a scream. She was startled almost beyond control, yet mastered the fright instantly, she glanced about at the partially open door, and stealthily closed it tightly.

"What—what are you doing here?" she gasped in English, her voice trembling. "Listening?"

"What—what are you doing here?" she gasped in English, her voice trembling. "Listening?"

WEAK; RUN-DOWN

Carolina Lady Got So She Could Just Drag.—"Cardui Built Me Up," She Declares.

Kennersville, N. C.—In an interesting statement regarding Cardui, the Woman's Tonic, Mrs. Wesley Mabe, of near here, recently said: "I have known Cardui for years, but never knew its worth until a year or so ago. I was in a weakened, run-down condition. I became dragsy—didn't eat or sleep to do any good; couldn't do anything without a great effort. I tried different remedies and medicines, yet I continued to drag.

"I decided to give Cardui a trial, and found it was just what I really needed. It made me feel much stronger—soon after I began to use it. I began to eat more, and the nervous, weak feeling began to leave. Soon I was a sleeping god.

"I used Cardui with one daughter who was puny, felt bad and tired all the time. It brought her right out, and soon she was as well as a girl could be. We think there is nothing like Cardui."

Do not allow yourself to become weak and run-down from womanly troubles. Take Cardui. You may find it just what you really need. For more than 40 years it has been used by thousands and thousands, and found just as Mrs. Mabe describes. Get just as Mrs. Mabe describes. At your druggist's.

Hall's Catarrh Medicine

"Those who are in a 'run-down' condition will notice that Catarrh medicine does much more than when they are in good health. This fact proves that while Catarrh is a local disease, it is greatly influenced by constitutional conditions. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE is a Tonic and Blood Purifier, and acts through the blood upon the mucous surfaces of the body, thus reducing the inflammation and restoring normal conditions. All druggists. Circulars free. E. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio.

IN MEMORIAM

The announcement of the death of Dawson Tapp spread an unusual gloom over the hearts of his many relatives and friends in and around this community, where he was well known. Dawson was sick only a few days, pneumonia setting up and he only lived a few hours. His wife and family were heart broken over the suddenness of his death.

Dawson Tapp was born October 30th, 1875 and died July 28th, 1921. He was the youngest son of Rich and Tapp and wife, deceased. He was married to Miss Jessie Conyers, daughter of F. B. Conyers and wife, near Wyoming. To this union four daughters were born. Mrs. Clara Warren and Mrs. Minnie Warden, of Ohio, and Mrs. Ella Peterson, of Paris, Ky., and Miss Anna Dawson, at home.

Dawson was an intelligent man, and an industrious and prominent farmer. Was widely known as a successful trader and an excellent judge of live stock, and had accumulated quite a goodly sum of money. He provided well for his family. He leaves one sister, Mrs. Minnie Goodpastor, of Salt Lick; one half brother, William Tapp, of Howards Mill, and one half sister, Mrs. A. L. Spades, of Ashland, besides his wife and daughters, and a host of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

The funeral services were conducted at the home on Saturday at 10 A. M. by Elder H. S. Ficklin, assisted by Rev. Wilson, after which the remains were interred in the Owensville cemetery. The family has the sympathy of the entire community in their sad bereavement.

Do it Now. You will notice on the desks of many successful business men, and others who have an inclination to be successful, the words: "Do it Now," and most of them are endeavoring to live up to the motto. It is an excellent suggestion to one who is in the habit of always putting off until tomorrow what should be done today. In addition to the terse little sentence, "Do it Now," might be added another phrase, which from its various applications has become more or less slang, but it is business, just the same, and applies to many enterprises, and that is "get busy." The old song of "The Water Mill" is true. The mill will never grind with the water that has passed. The minutes that are wasted we can never get again.—Thrill Magazine.

Roof of Mount Vernon. The wood shingle roof on George Washington's home at Mount Vernon was replaced by tin in 1785 and was not again repaired until 1880—a life of 75 years, says the American Forestry Magazine of Washington. There have been many instances found where shingle roofs have lasted satisfactorily for fifty years. It is not at all unusual to attribute such a life to the cedar when we consider that the shingles in which some of the Egyptian pyramids were buried three thousand years ago are still found in fairly sound condition.

Typewriting No Chance. Letter writers who have not been able to escape detection when they are involved in an illegal project can no longer protect themselves by utilizing a typewriter. It has been proven by students of the subject that no two persons have quite the same "touch," and once typewriting is as individual as is his finger print. It has for some time been known that every typewriter produces characteristic work, which under a powerful microscope appears to be entirely different from the writing of any other machine. These facts open up a tremendous and extremely interesting field for the scientific criminologist and hunter. They have figured in a number of trials lately, and as time goes on a knowledge of them is sure to be a sure and not of all our leading police officials all over America.—William Leslie French in Leslie's.

Bat a Curious Animal. The wing of a bat is a most wonderful instance of adaptation for a special end, for it is nothing but a greatly modified forelimb or hand. The elongated bones serve, like the ribs of an umbrella, to keep the skin stretched and taut when the owner is in flight. When the bat alights it doubles up its "fingers," the skin falls in wrinkly folds, and using its thumb joints as fulcrum it is able to run almost as quickly as a mouse. The skin of the wings not only joins the hind limbs, but extends from them to the tail, thus making the rubber with which the bat can steer when flying; and when the tail is brought up beneath the body, forms a bag or receptacle, which is of use to its owner.

Brightening the Home. A coat of stain with two coats of varnish, after the old finish has been removed, will do wonders to any old article of furniture. Or paint and enamel with a dabby design stenciled on a bedroom suite will make it a thing of beauty. What could be prettier than a bedroom set stained in walnut, a light gray wall for a background with pink drapes, white curtains, old rose and white rag rugs with a little touch of very pale blue here and there; or a bedroom suite stained in oak with a cream or ivory background, with either blue or yellow creosote over-drapes or brown and cream drapes, ivory curtains and a brown and tan rag rug?

Cat Animals Easy to Trap. Contrary to the general idea, cat animals, such as tigers and leopards, are the easiest to catch in traps, as well as mice. The work is as simple as baiting a rat-trap, and it requires little sagacity. A box-trap with a spring door will make a catch time after time, with no more trouble than transferring the animal to a transportation cage and releasing it in a trap with a chicken or a small goat. After recovering from the surprise of finding itself trapped, the animal eats the bait, which supplies it with food until the natives come along on their regular tours of inspection.

Working Up a Climax. A woman traveler in the South tells about a slight seeing tour which she made in a New Orleans auto-bus. "The car was full of tourists, and the guard shouted with a strong voice through a megaphone. Nothing of his intentions remains in my memory except his reply to a tourist who asked, as we entered one of the beautiful cemeteries, what the four figures kneeling at the corners at the base of a tall marble statue represented. He answered: 'That monument was erected by Mr. Morhardt, and the four figures represent Faith, Hope and Charity, and Mrs. Morhardt.'"
